Brain Computer Interface (see reference list)

Brain controlled wheelchair

Results:

In a few days, two human subjects learned to mentally drive a robot between rooms in a house-like environment and visit three or four rooms in a prescribed order.

When the subjects later controlled the robot manually along the same trajectories, the performance was only marginally better than the mental performance.