Video – Representation of situation I

Marvin Minsky

Frames,
a data structure used to divide knowledge into substructures by representing "stereotyped situations."

A frame contains information on
- how to use the frame,
- what to expect next
- what to do when these expectations are not met.

Some of the slots are generally unchanged.
Some slots (terminals) can change => value range

Different frames may share the same terminals.